The Slave Trade. RIAL OF SAMUEL B. HAYNES, FIRST MATE OF THE NIGHTINGALE.

MAY 6 .- The United States vs. Samuel B. Haynes .- The cused is indicted for acting as first mate of the Nightingale, which took on board, on 20th April, 1861, five handred negroes, on the coast of Africa, for the purpose of selling them into slavery, contrary to the statutes of Messrs, Delafield Smith, United States District Attorboy, and Assistant District Attorney Andrews appeared the government. Messrs. John McKeon and James T. Brady for the defence.

Mr. McKeon said that he had a motion to make. The District Attorney had sent two indictments against this District Attorney had sent two indictments against this defendant. Haynes, Winslow and Westerveit had been first indicted conjointly, and then Haynes and Winslow ware indicted. He desired to know on which indictment he would try the accused.

The United States District Attorney said he would make an election as to which he would try Haynes on. He proposed to try him on the capital charge.

Mr. McKeon said that the indictment against Winslow should be settled now, as he (course) might have occasion to examine him as a witness for the defence.

The District Attorney said that the prosecution did not intend to examine Westerveit, who had been already tried; but as the jury did not agree in his case the government had consented to his going into the army. The Court refused to make any order respecting the indictment against Winslow, and directed the jury to be empanhelled in the case of Haynes.

Mr. Joseph Haight (juror), in answer to the District Attorney, said that he would have no hesitation in finding a verdict of guilty in a case of murder; but he could not say that he would in other criminal cases, where the penalty was death, be disposed to find a verdict of guilty. The Court dustred him to stand aside.

Lewis W. Dunham said he would find a verdict of guilty, if death had been the result of the traffic, but not otherwise.

Judge Smalley to the juror—If the law made highway gaitty, if the evidence warranted it, atmough he life hat been taken in the act of robberty A. Gertainly. The juror was then sworn.

George Muller was desired to standaside, as he said he would feel reluctance in fluding a verdict except in case of murder. Several other jurors expressed them selves unwilling to find a verdict in any case where the penalty was death, except in cases of murder, and they were excused from attending.

Caivin Vaughan (juror), in answer to the Court, said that he thought capital punishment, except in the case of murder, ought to be abolished; he thought even in murder cases other punishment might be substituted. The juror was descred to standaside.

Another juror was descred to standaside.

Another juror was asked if he had any conscientions scrupies on the subject of the death penalty. A. I have in this case, because I think the crime was committed (if it was committed) under the conviction that he (the prisoner) would not be punished for it.

After the exercise of seven peremptory challenges on the part of the accused, the following gentlemen were sworn:— the part of the accused, the following gentlemen were sworn —

David Griffiths, Isaac M. Sands,
Lewis Dunham, Wm. Buhler, Ananas M. Cameron, Rufus L. Todd,
Jos. Hopkins, Joseph C. Cook,
Sherlock Hilman, Joseph C. Cook,
Bernard Hursom, Harris Bogert.

The jurors will be kept together day and night until the termination of the trial.

United States District Attorney Delafield Smith proceeded to open the case for the government and to detail the circumstances and incidents of the voyage of the ship Nightingale, of which the accused was first mate, and the taking on board of five hundred negroes on the coast of Africa for the purpose of selling them into slavery.

The trial of Westervelt, second mate of the same vestel, was unly reported in the Herald; and, as the facts are the same, they do not require repetition on the present trial. The jury did not agree in the case of Westervelt, and he is now engaged in the Union army.

After some introductory observations, and the recitaof the laws which the Court is bound to recite to the Grand Jury , Judge McCunn spoke thus in reference to the ict to suppress intemperance—

In charging you upon this question, I would call your particular attention to that part of it in regard to the toeping and selling of intoxicating liquous on Sunday, upon which I have already amounced my opinion from the hanch. In order to justify you, gentlemen, in find-particular attention to that part of it in regard to the seeping and selling of intoxicating liquors on Sunday, anon which I have already announced my opinion from this bench. In order to justify you, gentlemen, in finding a true bill against any party charged with keeping or disposal of intoxicating liquors on Sunday, evidence of the most positive character must be produced before you, showing that the party so charged not only kept and disposed of intoxicating liquors on Sunday, but that the liquors were kept and disposed of publicly, that is, which open doors and windows, exposed to the general public, and public ingress and egrees to the premises of the accused permitted, the same as on the ordinary days of the week devoted to business.

This public mode of keeping or disposing of intoxicating fiquors on Sunday would be equally as annoying to the community and disturb the peace of Sunday as would the sale of any other article on that day in the same manner, and should be strictly pravented. The selling is intoxicating fiquers, however, is not an offence in itself, and the prohibition of its sale on Sunday, by the Lagislature, was evidently intended to prevent that upon sale of it which would necessarily disturb the quiet of that day, to which, not only by the laws of the land, but by the common consent of all intelligent communities, it is acknowledged to be devoted. If, therefore, intoxicating liquors be privately kept or disposed of by inn or tawart keepers, and all public admission to their places sirtled years, the same and all public admission to their places sirtled years of the land, but hy the common consent of all intelligent communities, it is acknowledged to be devoted. If, therefore, intoxicating liquors be privately kept or disposed of by inn or tawart keepers, and all public admission to their places arrichly refused, and the usual quiet of Sunday is not in any measure disturbed, then no offence under the statit has been committed. I would here expecially call your attention to the Metropolita vexed question has occasioned. Thousands of suits now encumber some of the calendars of our civil courts, and are rapidly accumulating, to the great increase of our taxes, and to the positive detriment of all other litigation. The public attention is now fully aroused to the vast importance of this matter, and the necessity of its speedy determination. And it becomes my solemn duty, as well as yours, gentlemen, without the fear of any opposition, or the venom of any matignity, to calmly and impartially view this question in its true and proper light, so that the laws in regard to it may become wholesome, and their true diguity be preserved, and the peace and good order of all classes of the diversified community of our great city legally maintained.
